

---

CONTRIBUTORS

Benedict R. O'G. Anderson is Aaron M. Binenkorb Professor of International Studies, Emeritus, at Cornell University, New York.

Siddharth Chandra is Assistant Professor of Economics in the Graduate School of Public and International Affairs at the University of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. His current research focuses on the economic history of Indonesia during the colonial period, including the opium regie, labor markets, and economic aspects of race relations.

Jill Forshee is a research scholar at the Center for Southeast Asia Studies, University of California, Berkeley. Author of Between the Folds: Stories of Cloth, Lives, and Travels from Sumba (University of Hawaii Press, 2001), she is currently working on a book incorporating her recent research in Sumba, West Timor, and East Timor regarding arts and folklore in these regions following times of social turmoil.

Janet Hoskins is Professor of Anthropology at the University of Southern California and the author of The Play of Time and Biographical Objects: How Things Tell the Stories of People's Lives (1998).

Abidin Kusno teaches history and theory of architecture and urbanism in the department of Art History at Binghamton University, State University of New York. He is the author of Behind the Postcolonial: Architecture, Urban Space and Political Cultures in Indonesia (2000).

Dave McRae is a PhD student in the Faculty of Asian Studies, Australian National University. This article is based on his honors thesis.

Rudolf Mrázek is Professor in the History Department at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

James T. Siegel is Professor of Anthropology at Cornell University, New York.

Patricia Spyer is Professor of Anthropology at Leiden University. She is the author of The Memory of Trade: Modernity's Entanglements on an Eastern Indonesian Island (2000), and the editor of Border Fetishisms: Material Objects in Unstable Spaces (1998).

John G. Taylor, Professor of Politics at South Bank University, London, is the author of East Timor: the Price of Freedom (Zed Books, 1999). Currently he is working for UNDP/UNICEF in Dili as a National Development Plan advisor.

Jeremy Wallach recently received his doctorate from the Department of Anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania. His dissertation is an ethnographic study of youth culture, popular music, and social change in contemporary Indonesia with a focus on relationships between musical genres.