
CONTRIBUTORS

Benedict R. O'G. Anderson is the Aaron L. Binenkorb Professor Emeritus of International Studies, Government, and Asian Studies at Cornell University, New York.

Michael Buehler is completing a PhD in Political Science at the London School of Economics and Political Science. His general scholarly interests embrace machine politics, local politics, and Islamist movements.

Tony Day is an independent scholar living in New Haven, Connecticut. His edited volume, Identifying with Freedom: Indonesia after Suharto (New York, NY and Oxford: Berghahn Books), appeared earlier this year.

Arief W. Djati is a researcher at the AREK Foundation, which supports factory workers in Surabaya. He obtained his degree in political and social sciences at the University of Airlangga, Surabaya. He is the co-author (with Anton Lucas) of The Dog is Dead, So Throw It in the River: Environmental Politics and Water Pollution in Indonesia (Clayton: Monash Asia Institute, 2000) and of several books in Indonesian. He is interested in the dynamics of social and political affairs in East Java especially and Indonesia generally.

Ehito Kimura is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Hawai'i at Manoa.

Marcus Mietzner is currently Senior Visiting Fellow at The Indonesian Institute, a public policy research center in Jakarta. He received his PhD from the Australian National University and is the author of The Politics of Military Reform in Post-Suharto Indonesia: Elite Conflict, Nationalism and Institutional Resistance (Washington, DC: The East-West Center Washington, 2006).

Lene Pedersen, associate professor in the Department of Anthropology and Museum, Central Washington University, Ellensburg, WA, is author of Ritual and World Change in a Balinese Princedom (Durham, NC: Carolina Academic Press, 2006).

Scott Schlossberg is a PhD candidate in the department of South and Southeast Asian Studies at University of California-Berkeley. He is writing his dissertation on the role of leftist cultural movements in the nationalization of literary traditions in Hindi and Indonesian.

John T. Sidel, the Sir Patrick Gillam Professor of International and Comparative Politics at the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE), is the author of Riots, Pogroms, Jihad: Religious Violence in Indonesia (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 2006) and The Islamist Threat in Southeast Asia: A Reassessment (Washington, DC: East-West Center, 2007). He is currently working on a book titled Republicanism, Communism, Islam: Transnational Motors of "Nationalist" Revolution in Southeast Asia.

James T. Siegel is a professor of anthropology and Asian studies at Cornell University.

Paige Tan is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of North Carolina–Wilmington. She has previously published on Indonesia's national political parties and democratization. She is currently researching post-Suharto transitional justice in Indonesia and the teaching of the Suharto era in the education system.

Paul W. van der Veur is professor emeritus in political science at Ohio University. He recently authored The Lion and the Gadfly: Dutch Colonialism and the Spirit of E. F. E. Douwes Dekker (Leiden: KITLV Press, 2006), an account of Douwes Dekker's heroics in colonial and independent Indonesia between 1898 and 1950.

Andrew Willford is an associate professor of anthropology at Cornell University.