
CONTRIBUTORS

Tamara Aberle is a PhD candidate at Royal Holloway, University of London. Her research is on contemporary Indonesian theater and civil society.

Benedict R. O'G. Anderson is the Aaron L. Binenkorb Professor Emeritus of International Studies, Government, and Asian Studies at Cornell University. His works include Imagined Communities: Reflections on the Origin and Spread of Nationalism; Language and Power: Exploring Political Cultures in Indonesia; and The Spectre of Comparisons: Nationalism, Southeast Asia, and the World.

Sirojuddin Arif is a doctoral student in the department of political science at Northern Illinois University (DeKalb, IL). He also earned an M.S. degree in social anthropology from the University of Oxford. His main research interests focus on poverty, social protection, and the politics of development.

Timothy P. Barnard is an Associate Professor in the Department of History at the National University of Singapore. His research focuses on the environmental and cultural history of Indonesia and Malaysia. He has published extensively on state formation in eighteenth-century Sumatra, and is currently working on a monograph on the history of the Komodo dragon.

Elizabeth Chandra is a lecturer at the International Center, Keio University, Tokyo, and will be an International Institute for Asian Studies—Institute of Southeast Asian Studies (IIAS–ISEAS) postdoctoral fellow in 2012. Her research interests include colonial literatures, the Chinese in Southeast Asia, race and gender in Southeast Asia, and the politics of memory in Indonesia.

Christopher R. Duncan is an assistant professor of religious studies and global studies at Arizona State University. His research currently focuses on religion and violence, religious change, and forced migration in Indonesia.

Vedi Hadiz is Professor of Asian Societies and Politics, Asia Research Centre, Murdoch University. He has received an Australian Research Council Future Fellowship, through which research for this article was conducted (Project Number FT0991885). He is the author of Localising Power in Post-Authoritarian Indonesia: a Southeast Asia Perspective (Stanford University Press, 2010), co-author of Reorganising Power in Indonesia: The Politics of Oligarchy in an Age of Markets (Routledge, 2004), and editor of Empire and Neoliberalism in Asia (Routledge, 2006).

Mary Somers Heidhues has taught at universities in the United States and Germany. Among her publications, the most recent is Chinese Presence in Malay-Indonesian Narratives: Founders and Heroes or Merchants and Wife-Givers? (Hamburg: Hamburger Südostasienstudien 4, 2010).

David Jenkins is the author of Suharto and His Generals: Indonesian Military Politics, 1975–1983 (Cornell Modern Indonesia Project, 1984), and “Soeharto and the Japanese Occupation,” Indonesia 88 (October 2009). He is writing a life-and-times study of the former Indonesian president, focusing on his rise to power.

Ann Kumar is an Emeritus Professor at the Australian National University, and a former faculty dean there. Her publications include: The Diary of a Javanese Muslim: Religion, Politics, and The Pesantren, 1883–1886 (ANU, Faculty of Asian Studies Monographs, 1985); (with John H. McGlynn), Illuminations: Writing Traditions of Indonesia (Weatherhill, 1996); Java and Modern Europe: Ambiguous Encounters (Curzon, 1996); and Globalizing the Prehistory of Japan: Language, Genes, and Civilization (Routledge, 2009). More recent interests are: the use of scientific research for history writing; language contact; and maritime history.

Henk Schulte Nordholt is Head of Research at the Royal Netherlands Institute of Southeast Asian and Caribbean Studies (KITLV) in Leiden and professor of Southeast Asian Studies at the VU University in Amsterdam. His main fields of research include Balinese history, political violence, the anthropology of colonialism, and contemporary politics in Indonesia. His recent publications include “Dams and Dynasty, and the Colonial Transformation of Balinese Irrigation Management,” in Human Ecology; and “Modernity and Cultural Citizenship in the Netherlands Indies: An Illustrated Hypothesis,” in Journal of Southeast Asian Studies.

Tessel Pollmann is the coauthor and author of the following books: Tessel Pollmann and Juan Seleky, Istori Istori Maluku, het verhaal van de Molukkers (Amsterdam, 1979); Tessel Pollmann, Juan Seleky, and Bert Nienhuis, Terug op de Molukken (Amsterdam, 1982); Tessel Pollmann and Ingrid Harms, In Nederland door Omstandigheden (Baarn, 1987); Tessel Pollmann, Bruidstraantjes en andere Indische geschiedenissen (Den Haag, 1999); and Tessel Pollmann, Van Waterstaat tot wederopbouw, het leven van dr. ir J A. Ringers, 1885-1965 (Amsterdam, 2006).

Nancy J. Smith-Hefner is Associate Professor and Associate Chair of Anthropology at Boston University. As a linguistic anthropologist and specialist in religion and gender in Southeast Asia, she has conducted research on language, identity, and gender socialization in Java, as well as identity and moral education among Cambodian refugees in the United States. Her current research takes up questions of gender and sexuality among Muslim Javanese youth and traces trends and controversies in Muslim youth culture in Java.

Akiko Sugiyama is an assistant professor of history at the University of Macau, where she teaches Southeast Asian history and world history. Her current research project examines the evolving notion of family and household in late-colonial Java.

Christina Sunardi is an Assistant Professor of ethnomusicology in the School of Music at the University of Washington, Seattle. A member of the Society for Ethnomusicology, she also plays with the Seattle-based ensemble Gamelan Pacifica and teaches gamelan at Seattle Pacific University. Her research interests include performance in east Java, gender, and spirituality. Her recent publications include articles in Asian Music, Bijdragen tot de Taal-, Land- en Volkenkunde, and Ethnomusicology.

Yen-ling Tsai received her PhD in Anthropology from the University of California, Santa Cruz. Her research interests include rural-urban formation, feminist theory, and Southern Chinese diaspora. Her dissertation is an ethnographic study of the everyday processes of racial formation in urban Indonesia. She is currently conducting a research project on new ruralism in Taiwan and Indonesia. She has published in Taiwan Journal of Southeast Asian Studies and Inside Indonesia.