EDITORIAL.

All those who attended the lecture Saturday at Daily Hall, on the "Cult of Nationalism" by Sir Rabindranath Tagore enjoyed a rare privilege. Sir Tagore is not only the most famous poet of modern India, but is also a prophet, and reformer. He has a wonderful personality. His voice is pleasant and tends to make his audience feel favorable towards whatever he has to say. But his address needed no fore-runner to prepare the way for a favorable reception. "The Cult of Nationalism" won disciples and friends through its own merits. It showed deep thinking carried on for many years on the subject; it also showed a sympathetic understanding of human nature and human affairs.
