

Sometimes you have to wonder if you are doing yourself justice or just playing the victim card. You know, when you have all these different identities that come together to make a holistic person, you might be tempted to pick and pull at each of those identities to — give yourself an advantage or an excuse. And while the differences between us are real, sometimes they can be over-exaggerated and divisive. That doesn't mean that they shouldn't be acknowledged, but I think we have to know where the limit is and when to make exceptions.