

I don't think people realize that with different identities comes different realities, and we lose touch of differences. We like to think difference is bad, and we like to live in the homage of society, but only with the homage of differences can we move past them. And get to the end of what society should be doing is bringing us together, not erasing our differences.