Dear Sandy:

I enclose some correspondence that I believe is self-explanatory. As my letter of April 28 to Jean Lesher notes I believe the publications arm of the ABA is pursuing a course that is truly embarrassing for the organization. Our institute can publish public domain professional responsibility codes without the ABA's permission so my concern is far less over my project than the ABA. I send this to you assuming that if you share my concern you may see a way to bring the matter to the attention of those in the ABA who have a broader agenda than maximizing revenues for ABA Publications (and not rocking the boat with West?)

Sincerely,

Peter W. Martin
