ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Several people have given generously in helping me bring this project to completion. First, I am indebted to my committee chair, Professor Isaac Kramnick. His understanding of American political thought played no small part in inspiring my own research and his tireless consideration and encouragement were of incalculable benefit. Professor Lawrence Moore’s generous feedback was helpful in sharpening the focus of this work. His incisive commentary demanded much reflection. Professor Theodore Lowi’s enlivened review of the literature kept things interesting and his challenging questions helped me to refine my arguments. Professor Thomas Haskell and Professor Kenneth Cmiel provided provocative dialogue via e-mail.

Fellow graduate students also enriched the process of researching and writing. I thank Rebecca Egger, Ken Forsberg, Brian Jacobs, Michael Montesano, Bill Weinberg, and Mike and Lisa Wittmer for their engaging intellects and for their friendship. I thank Sue Smith for being a wonderful neighbor.

I owe much to my parents -- perhaps more than a son would ever be willing to acknowledge. Their support and counsel have made apparent the rewards of intellectual life. My sister and brother also deserve thanks. They have offered welcome counterweights to the pervasive presence of academia in the Fernandez household.

Finally, Susan Matt has been an indefatigable reader of my prose. As an American historian and as an assiduous grammarian she advised me on everything from apostrophes to historiography. In countless ways she has helped to smooth the rocky road of scholarship and life.
