CASE NO. U-8347

THOMAS C. BARRY,

Charging Party.

BOARD DECISION ON MOTION

This matter comes to us on a motion of Professor Thomas C. Barry with respect to his charge alleging that the agency fee rebate procedure of United University Professions (UUP) violates Section 209-a.2(a) of the Taylor Law. Professor Barry moves this Board to remove this matter from the Administrative Law Judge to whom it has been assigned and to "take direct and immediate charge of this case so that the violations complained of here may be swiftly and efficiently corrected." In the alternative, Professor Barry moves this Board to issue an order granting him temporary injunctive relief.

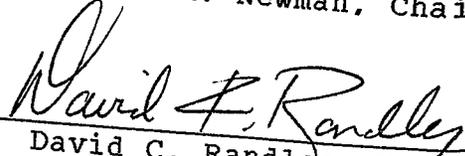

United University Professions has filed a response opposing both the original and alternative aspects of the motion.

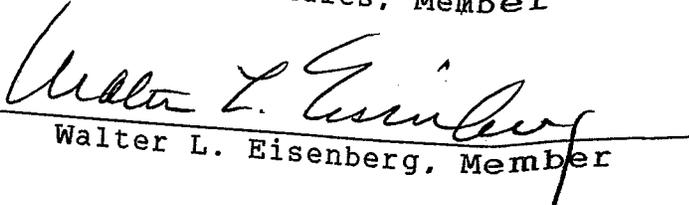

There is no basis in our Rules of Procedure for granting the original aspect of Professor Barry's motion, and there is no basis in the Taylor Law for granting the alternative aspect of it.

NOW, THEREFORE, WE ORDER that the motion herein be, and it hereby is, denied.

BOARD DECISION AND ORDER

This matter comes to us on the exceptions of the Watervliet Housing Authority (Authority) to a decision of the Director of Public Employment Practices and Representation (Director) dismissing its application for the designation of Helen Corina as confidential in accordance with the criteria set forth in §201.7 of the Taylor Law. The application is opposed by the Civil Service Employees Association, Local 1000, AFSCME, AFL-CIO (CSEA), which represents the employees of the Authority.

Section 201.7(a) of the Taylor Law provides that employees may be designated as confidential only if they assist and act in a confidential capacity to managerial employees in connection with (1) "the preparation for and conduct of collective negotiations", (2) "the administration of agreements" or (3) "personnel administration".

Helen Corina is a senior typist who works at the administrative office of the Authority. She is also president of the CSEA chapter. The staff of the Authority consists of an Executive Director, a clerk typist, a senior typist (Corina), and a tenant relations examiner, all of whom work at the Authority's administrative office. The 1985 operating budget of the Authority shows an additional five employees, a maintenance mechanic and four maintenance laborers, while the testimony refers to a modernization coordinator and a part-time clerk typist who helps with his activities. Of these employees, the parties have agreed that the Executive Director, Charles Patricelli, is "managerial" and that the clerk typist, who serves as his personal secretary, is "confidential" and that both are excluded from the negotiating unit.^{1/}

^{1/}In a 1981 decision, the Director determined that there should be a negotiating unit consisting of all the employees of the Authority other than the Executive Director. In doing so, he rejected a claim of the Authority that Corina should be excluded from the unit by reason of either managerial or confidential responsibilities. The Authority did not file exceptions to this decision of the Director. (14 PERB ¶4034)

The record shows that Patricelli's responsibilities include preparations for and the conduct of collective negotiations for the Authority, and that he has a major role in the administration of collective bargaining agreements and in personnel administration. The Authority asserts that Corina performs confidential tasks relevant to collective negotiations and has access to related confidential information. In support of this proposition, it asserts that she maintains the financial records of the Authority. Indeed, it had applied to the Watervliet Civil Service Commission to have her job title changed to Senior Account Clerk, but the Commission declined to do so.

There is no dispute that Corina maintains the financial records of the Authority, makes its bank deposits, controls its bank book, prepares its payroll, files its tax reports and is involved in the preparation of the Authority's budget. The record shows, however, that these financial documents have no direct bearing upon collective negotiations. The Authority's fiscal year runs from October 1 through September 30. Its collective bargaining agreements with CSEA have run from January 1 through December 31. Accordingly, the preparation of the budget has preceded collective negotiations and the Housing and Urban Development Department has instructed Patricelli to specify only actual employee costs, not anticipated employee costs. Actual increases are financed out of the reserves of the Authority.

On one occasion Patricelli submitted a proposed budget containing an estimated five percent increase for salaries. The basis of this, however, was not related to the Authority's collective negotiations with CSEA. At that time the parties' agreement provided for an increase in the same percentage as CSEA might negotiate with the City of Watervliet, and Patricelli estimated that the City and CSEA would settle for a five percent increase. In any event the Housing and Urban Development Department directed Patricelli not to include such estimates in future proposed budgets.

The basis of the Authority's claim that Corina is a confidential employee is not based upon any indication that her knowledge of financial operations of the Authority gave her direct information related to the Authority's posture in negotiations. Rather, it is that her intimacy with that financial data means that she knows things that are not intended for the eyes and ears of rank-and-file employees. An indication of this, according to the Authority, is that she knows not only the anticipated income from the Authority's investments, as reflected in the budget, but also its actual income. Thus, according to the Authority, if the budget reflected a six percent interest income but the investments were actually yielding ten percent, her knowledge of this would give CSEA an improper advantage in negotiations.

According to the Authority, Corina's situation should be compared to that of an employee of the Saugerties Central School District who was declared confidential because she was privy to information -- and indeed participates in the preparation of such information -- which would show where the District has placed funds that are available for financing employee benefits that may be granted in collective negotiations.^{2/}

While the quoted language from Saugerties might, if taken out of the context of the facts in that case, be applicable to Corina, in context it is not. The information to which the Saugerties employee was privy and which she participated in preparing was not only general financial data. She also was used to "cost out" both union and management proposals in negotiations.^{3/} As indicated in our decision, an employee who is called upon to "cost out" employer proposals in negotiations is confidential because her duties make her aware of the employer's "likely negotiating stratagem" This is not true of Corina.

We also note that the difference that varying rates of interest would make in the reserves of the Authority would not be significant for negotiations given the fact that the reserves are substantially in excess of the total cost of employee wages and benefits, to say nothing of possible increases, the only sum that would be financed from the reserves.^{4/} Moreover, the actual interest income of the Authority is public information.

The circumstances here are therefore similar to those before us in other cases when we have determined that a "confidential" designation is not warranted on the basis of an employee's general knowledge of the employer's finances. Rather, it is the employee's involvement "in the extrapolation for labor relations purposes of the financial data she prepared" which is critical for such a designation.^{5/}

Another argument made by the Authority is that Corina is confidential because her work is stored in the same three filing cabinets which contain Patricelli's files, including correspondence with the Authority's attorney and accountant. Thus, according to the Authority, she has access to those files. The Director rejected this argument

^{4/}The Authority's operating budget for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, a public document, shows that the accumulated reserves of the Authority amount to $336,630. The record shows that wages and salaries, including overtime, were budgeted at $80,106, and other employee benefits and costs were budgeted at $58,780.

on the ground that the record does not establish that confidential documents are stored in those file cabinets. In its exceptions the Authority argues that the record establishes that all Patricelli's files are stored in those cabinets.

The record does not establish that all Patricelli's correspondence, including confidential material related to collective negotiation, is stored in those file cabinets. However, even if we were to so find, we do not feel this sufficient reason to declare Corina confidential. The public policy underlying the Taylor Law is that all public employees should be afforded the rights of organization and representation. The exclusion of confidential employees is an exception to this public policy and, by declaration of the Legislature, it should be narrowly construed.^{6/} Where, as here, the confidential negotiation files of the Authority can be segregated from Corina's files with little difficulty, the fact that they may not have been so segregated in the past is not sufficient reason for depriving Corina of her Taylor Law rights of organization and representation.^{7/} The record also establishes that Corina has no access to confidential information relating to contract administration. With respect to personnel matters, Corina maintains payroll and leave records. There is no indication in the record, however, that she has any advance information of confidential personnel matters such as anticipated transfers or discipline. Accordingly, the Authority's contention that she is confidential by reason of access to information regarding contract administration and personnel matters rests upon the same evidence of potential access by reason of working in the Authority's administrative office that it relies upon in connection with her role in negotiations.

One of these, other than access to the three filing cabinets, is that in the absence of Patricelli's secretary she sometimes opens the mail and may therefore have access to confidential information. The record shows that Corina has opened the mail on several occasions but that if there is anything on the face of the envelope that indicates that she should not open it, she does not do so. There is no evidence that she has ever had access to confidential correspondence relating to negotiations contract administration or personnel matters.

The Authority also contends that Corina is confidential because she supervises the confidential clerk typist. The record shows that Corina has diverse responsibilities including administration of one substantive program of the Authority. In this connection she, as well as Patricelli, assigns work to the clerk typist. Corina's supervision of the clerk typist is limited to the work that she assigns, which is not of a confidential nature.

Finally, the Authority argues that if Corina does not now have confidential responsibilities, the reason is that it has had to guard against giving her such duties because she is the union's president. This is not a sufficient reason for designating Corina confidential.^{8/} It is her actual duties that determine whether Corina is confidential, and not the duties that the Authority might like to assign to her.

In summary, it may be said that the Authority has taken steps to make sure that Corina is not privy to any confidential information which may be relevant to collective negotiations contract administration on personnel matters, and that, if it wishes to do so, it could easily take additional steps to further assure this insulation.
