

---

CONTRIBUTORS

Greg Acciaoli is currently a Visiting Fellow in the Southeast Asia Research Center of the City University of Hong Kong, but returns to his limited-term position as Research Fellow at the Asia Research Centre of Murdoch University in Perth at the end of the year. In mid-year 2002, he resumes his normal position as lecturer in the Anthropology Discipline Group, School of Social and Cultural Studies, The University of Western Australia in Perth.

Lorraine Aragon is Visiting Associate Professor in the Department of Anthropology at East Carolina University, Greenville, North Carolina.

Marshall Clark is a lecturer in Indonesian studies at the University of Tasmania and is writing a PhD dissertation on modern Indonesian literature at the Australian National University.

Thomas P. Gibson is Associate Professor in the Department of Anthropology at the University of Rochester, New York. He studies mystical and political power in Southeast Asia using ethnographic, comparative, and historical methods.

Douglas Kammen is a visiting professor at the National University of East Timor.

Samuel Moore is a pseudonym for an American historian of Southeast Asia.

Octovianus Mote is a former reporter for Kompas and a current Visiting Fellow with the Southeast Asia Program at Cornell University, New York.

Stanley J. O'Connor is Professor Emeritus in the Art History and Asian Studies Departments, Cornell University, New York.

Danilyn Rutherford is Assistant Professor in the Department of Anthropology at the University of Chicago.

Jacqueline A. C. Vel is Assistant Professor in Modern Asian History at the University of Amsterdam and coordinator of Asian Studies in Amsterdam.